

ADVICE TO ANTI-OBAMACARE CANDIDATES

By Woodrow Wilcox

Most people know that I am against Obamacare because it hurts senior citizens in so many ways. I've been following the 2014 election races and praying for the candidates who oppose Obamacare. Here are a few items of advice for Anti-Obamacare candidates and their supporters.

1. Make sure that voters know that when an incumbent senator or congressman voted for Obamacare, the vote was for cutting money from Medicare by almost a trillion dollars. That's money that would help senior citizens pay for their healthcare. Voting for Obamacare was like mugging and robbing every senior citizen in America. Hurting senior citizens is negative. Nice senators and congressmen don't vote to hurt seniors. Nasty ones do. The seniors' children and grandchildren (who vote) naturally will dislike an incumbent that they understand hurt their elderly relatives. Use that natural reaction of dislike for an incumbent who voted to hurt an elderly relative to your advantage.
2. Attack an incumbent who voted for Obamacare as being either evil or irresponsible. If the incumbent was in the small inner circle who knew how Obamacare would hurt seniors and voted for the bill, then the incumbent is evil for deliberately hurting senior citizens. If the incumbent voted for the Obamacare bill without bothering to read it, then the incumbent is irresponsible. Every senator and congressman swears an oath to protect our constitution and our constitutional rights. If the incumbent votes for a bill without even bothering to learn what is in the bill, then the incumbent is irresponsible. Irresponsible people who do not take seriously the oath to protect our constitution and our constitutional rights should not be re-elected. They can't be trusted to act responsibly.
3. Expand the number of people who realize that the Obamacare law hurts seniors now and in the future. For the next seventeen years, the number of people who turn 65 and enroll in Medicare will increase by an average of ten thousand people per day. Obamacare cut the amount of money for Medicare benefits. But, the number of people expecting to get Medicare to help pay for their medical needs is rising. The only way to balance that without changing Obamacare is to give every senior citizen less help with healthcare costs. The federal government will change the rules about what is and what is not covered by Medicare in order to save the federal government money and push more healthcare costs onto seniors now and seniors in the future. That has already started to happen. Obamacare hurts seniors today. But, Obamacare will hurt future seniors much more. People age 35 to 65 will feel more financial pain than today's seniors if Obamacare is unchanged.
4. Remind younger people that Obamacare hurts their grandparents and will hurt their parents if nothing is changed. College students especially should be informed of this fact. College students often get financial help from their grandparents and parents. Obamacare's attack on the financial interests of their grandparents and parents is an attack on the financial interests of college students, too. Most college students have a natural affinity and concern for grandparents and parents. Any incumbent who voted for Obamacare really voted to hurt the grandparents and parents of college students and other young people. Make sure that young voters understand how an incumbent who voted for Obamacare actually voted to cause financial harm to the young voter's relatives.

5. Put a mailing address on the candidate's website. Many senior citizens will use the internet to get information, but they don't trust the internet enough to make a donation through it. With the many new reports of hackers gaining access to business computers that keep customers' personal and financial information, it is likely that more and more people will become reluctant to use the internet to make donations or do business. By not including a mailing address like a post office box on the website, the candidate and the campaign lose a chance to get a senior citizen to send a donation check and increase that donor's commitment to vote for the candidate. From what I observed at many candidate websites, I believe that quite a few anti-Obamacare candidates are failing to connect with senior citizen voters because their websites don't make it easy to get the address to send a donation check.

Finally, you can't talk about Obamacare all the time. A candidate must discuss other issues, too. So, if you can't use more time to explain why Obamacare is bad, just refer voters to my website www.ObamacareHurtsSeniors.com. Tell them that the website was created by a Democrat who cares about senior citizens more than he cares about any political party, any political candidate, or any political agenda. When they visit that website, they will realize just how correct the anti-Obamacare candidate is.
